Dolphin Island Resort

Dolphin Island Resort in Fiji is private luxury at its best. A member of Huka Retreats, the 13-acre private retreat accommodates a maximum of eight guests and is perched on a small island north of Fiji's main island Viti Levu. Having undergone an extensive refurbishment the resort reopened in 2011 with new features including an infinity pool, updated interior design and revamped suites with outdoor showers and private garden courtyard. Each of the four guest suites has high, palm-thatched roofs and wooden shutters to pay homage to its tropical surrounds, while the interior is refined and elegant. The resort is also available on an exclusive use basis.

ACTIVITIES

With 13 acres of private island to explore and a crystal clear coastline to discover, adventure seekers are not left wanting. A variety of aquatic activities are available from swimming, snorkelling, tank dives and kayaking as well as cultural day trips visiting nearby villages. Or slip into Fiji time and enjoy a massage or facial (or both). Guests can also venture to the top of the island where a sleep-out bure awaits, featuring a thatched open-air bedroom for a romantic overnight stay.

DINING

Dining at Dolphin Island Resort is a far cry from the fried buffet often associated with a Fijian holiday. Guests can expect nothing less than fresh fish and produce for their meals, featuring many flavours and ingredients unique to Fijian cuisine. Freshly caught fish is brought to the island daily for guests to select their preference before being prepared and served. Tropical fruit is a staple on the island menu with papayas, mangoes, bananas and pineapples making an appearance at most meals. Dine formally at the eight-seat table in the main bure or for a more relaxed, airy atmosphere dine around the pool.

RATES

From A$9,000 per night all inclusive.
